Atira Women's Resource Society's second stage housing programs offer supportive housing to women with children who are looking for assistance in moving on from their experiences of violence/abuse. Atira supports all women, including those who are struggling with substance use and those struggling with mental and spiritual wellness.

About Maxx Wright Second Stage:

The Maxxine Wright Second Stage Housing Program offers a supportive housing program to women and children affected by violence /abuse. Women can stay for up to 24 months in an attractive self-contained apartment. Women are responsible for paying rent and bills and need to be able to live independently. A wide variety of health and social supports is available in the nearby program building.

Who is Maxx Wright for?

Women must be pregnant and/or have at least one child under the age of two years old at the time of entry to the program (older siblings welcome). Women must have children in their care to participate in the program. Generally, women selected for the program will be referred by first stage transition houses, shelters, and hospitals, or will have accessed other Atira services in the three months prior to applying to the program.

Please note that Maxx Wright is a program and not just housing and as such there are restrictions on guests and other activities (for example, guests must be approved, in advance, by program staff and only those determined to be safe will be allowed. Former partners and/or current boyfriends are not able to visit).
